

Exercise 6

Phone GPS enhances social networks by allowing users to utilize their current location for things such as real-time location sharing, geotagging content, and finding things to do in the immediate area. Some popular examples of this include Apple's "Find My" app, as well as when people travel and they upload photos of themselves at their location to the site and without having to explicitly state where they are, they can tag the location the photo was taken. Sites like Facebook also offer options to search for events that is happening in the area near where a person is in case they are looking to find something to spend their time on.
